

Rubenstein Public Relations, Inc.

September 14-20, 2006

Bliss just in

The search is on Web-hunting self-diagnosers can stop sifting through jumbled search-engine results for answers to their health-related Internet queries. Kosmix.com sorts the returns of your search into helpful categories like "Basic Information," "Clinical Trials," "Blogs" and many more, allowing you to better pinpoint the information you're looking for. Heads up, Google: Kosmix is planning the launch, in October, of a general search engine with apparently unprecedented organizational power.

Home improvement Ordering in has gone well beyond Chinese and pizza: Cygalle Healing Spa, Graceful Services and Body by Brooklyn are all making house calls so you can get your facial, acupuncture or massage fix in your very own apartment. With limited time and a client roster full of celebrities, swank-spa owner Cygalle Dias is difficult to retain.

So if you're not the high-profile type, the less judgmental Body by Brooklyn—whose visits are for groups of five or more—or Graceful Services might be for you. For more info, visit cygallehealingspa.com, gracefulservices.com and bodybybrooklyn.com.

Skin game Sephora and Klinger Advanced Aesthetics have recently launched the Johns Hopkins–approved Skinphysical, a free, 35-minute analysis that uses visual imaging and sensors to determine the condition of your epidermis in terms of its elasticity, UV damage and other factors. Based on the results, a skin-care expert will give you recommendations for treating your body's largest organ right. Available at Sephora Soho, 555 Broadway between Prince and Spring Sts (212-625-1309); and Sephora Union Square, 45 E 17th St between Union Square West and Park Avenue South (212-995-8833). —Kate Lowenstein